INTRODUCTION
According to Brown (2001) writing is thinking process, because writing is a process of putting ideas down on paper to transform thought into words and give them structure and coherent organization. While Harris (1997) states that the students can use writing to express their ideas, opinions, realities, and point of view. People can communicate a variety of messages known readers or unknown readers by writing. In writting some people can uses their language to deliever their mes sages.

Language is a tool for communicate with each others. In language, there are two types of language namely spoken language and written language. Blanchard and Root (1998: 1) in Mundriyah & Parmawati (2016) state that learning to write in a new language is not always easy. For written language, the writer can write what the ideas that they have, and usually for making the good written. The most important thing in written language is grammar for making cohesive and coherence from the texts. Discourse analysis in terms of both spoken and written language believed to helpful for both linguists and language teachers. It is simply” the study of language in use” Gee, J. P., & Handford (2013). In Toolan & McCarthy (2006) spoken and written discourses display grammatical connexions between individual clauses and utterances. For our purposes, these grammatical links can be classified under three broad types: reference (co-reference); ellipsis/substitution, and conjuction. In Mokrani (Toolan & McCarthy, 2006) reference involves the use of pronouns articles or adverbs to refer backward or forward to an item mentioned in the linguistic or situational text. In create cohesion, there are three types of reference: anaphoric, cataphoric, and exophoric. Reference within text can be classified into two items namely exophoric (situational) and endophoric (textual) that cover anaphoric (to preceding text) and cataphoric (to following text). Yule (1983) ; Haliday. Ruqyah (1976). Exophoric refers to an item in the word out of the text, because it is not text internal. it is not truly cohesive, but it is an equally important part of the reader or listener’s active role in creating coherence. Endophoric refers to textual items. By contrast to exophoric, endophoric reference is cohesive. Endophoric can be classified into two groups, first anaphoric, it refers to an item by looking back in the text (backward reference) in order to find the interpretation of the item. e.g., and the second is ataphoric. It refers to an item by looking forward. It is straightforward in order to find the interpretation of the item. e.g.: It’s going down quickly, the sun. In addition, in news stories and in literature, examples of cataphoric reference are often found in the opening sentences of the text.

References can be found in written text, such as short story, novel, advertisement, folklore, or etc. according Thomas (1846) most definition of folklore concern the “lore” but some concern the “folk”, lore- the materials of folklore rather than the people who use the materials-has been described in terms of origin, form, transmission, and function. In Indonesia, it has one folklore that familiar for all generation, namely folklore of Malin Kundang. Malin Kundang is the folklore from West Sumatera that which tells of a disobedient child to his mother for not acknowledging her mother after he became rich so that Malin was cursed to stone and that folklore still legend and popular in Indonesia, but the folklore is not known whether it is true or a mere story, but it contains so many moral values that a child should be more able to respect his parents, especially a mother. Folklore of Malin Kundang is written with the number of words or paragraphs that are quite a lot, so it can contain a reference in it, so the researcher choose the folklore Malin Kundang to be analyzed.
